SECTION C: SPECIFICATIONS/WORK STATEMENT

C.1 BACKGROUND

District of Columbia is a federal district as specified by the United States Constitution. The U.S. Congress has ultimate authority over the District of Columbia, though it has delegated considerable authority to the municipal government. The city is run by an elected mayor and a district council. The council is composed of 13 members: one elected from each of the eight wards and five members, including the chairman, elected at large. The mayor and council adopt a budget of local money with Congress reserving the right to make any changes. According to Public Law 108-7, the federal government also appropriates funds for the city.

The Department of Corrections (DOC) currently operates one of the 50 largest municipal jail systems in the country with an average daily population of approximately 2,600 inmates. Those in the custody of DOC include males (92 percent) and females (8 percent). The DOC system is comprised of two primary correctional facilities—the Central Detention Facility also known as the DC Jail and the privately operated Correctional Treatment Facility. In addition, DOC contracts with two (2) privately operated halfway houses for the community placement of male/female inmates that offer a variety of educational opportunities and other programming services.
